Curriculum Implementation

We finished our unit on emotions this week. The children really enjoyed sharing how they felt each morning. Most of the time they felt happy but they were glad when they could share if they were sad or even mad about things that happened to them during their morning routine as well. We charted our feelings on a graph to help build our counting and other math skills. Other activities this week included making stick puppets with emotion faces on them and playing with emotion figurines. We also had a bubble activity that gave us a chance to discuss feeling happy blowing bubbles, but also feeling frustrated or angry when our bubbles pop, blow away, or are difficult to make. We continued to sing about emotions and dance to express our emotions and we read some new emotion stories.
